Some paintings were cut from their frames, which still hang empty at the request of Isabella Stewart Gardner, whose will required that nothing in the collection ever be moved, and that no new works be brought in, or everything would be given to Harvard. Degas' "Cortege aux Environs de Florence," top right, and his "Program for an Artistic Soiree" were among the works stolen. / GETTY IMAGES AND FBI

A heist of Hollywood heights here in the Hub

Art theft. The 1990 heist of artwork worth $500 million from the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum still remains unsolved.

It was a crime like something out of the movies — two men, disguised as police officers, entered the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum, tied up the two night watchmen and made off with $500 million worth of artwork.

Now, 23 years after the largest property crime in U.S. history, the FBI says the case is anything but cold.

It's been six months since the FBI launched a public information campaign about the 13 stolen works of art, and Special Agent Geoff Kelly says the FBI is the closest it's been in years to finding the masterpieces.

"We're certainly closer now than we were a couple of years ago," Kelly said. "In the world of art theft, while 23 years sounds like an eternity, it's not that long in terms of how long valuable paintings can remain hidden. Sometimes they don't surface until somebody dies or somebody's cleaning out the estate of someone or somebody goes to jail."

Although he said it's a far-fetched theory, Kelly said it's possible that the paintings — by Rembrandt, Degas, Vermeer and Manet, among others — could be in the most obvious of places, including in a basement, on somebody's wall or in the trunk of a car.

He said he believes the reason they've remained hidden is that the thieves are not able to unload them.

"The individuals in art theft, especially in our country, are not the sophisticated professionals like you see in the movies — the Thomas Crowne Affair and things like that," Kelly said.

"They're criminals, they're burglary guys. They would just as easily go and steal a Rembrandt as they would steal somebody's car or somebody's television. … And what we think has occurred in this case, is, you steal something that is worth millions but it's very difficult to find a buyer for it, because obviously the more valuable a painting is, the more well known it is and therefore the more difficult it is to sell it."

Reports have surfaced that the mafia may have been involved in the thefts, specifically reputed Connecticut gangster Robert Gentile.

FBI officials have said in the past that they know the individuals responsible for the theft and were even able to trace some of the paintings' whereabouts in the years following the heist.

Kelly could not comment on any possible suspects in the case, but did say that the trail on the art went cold in Connecticut and Philadelphia in the early 2000s.

He said the FBI made its push in March to educate the public in that region with what the paintings look like.

"As an investigator, I've been working this case for 10 years. So, although I've never seen these paintings in person, I can draw them in my sleep," Kelly said.

"But for someone who's not so familiar with the case, these paintings could blend in, so we really wanted to get images of them out there. There's a good chance somebody saw them."

JILL GADSBY
jill.gadsby@metro.us

Film fodder

Kelly said the dramatic manner of the theft, as well as the $5 million reward being offered by the museum, coupled with the offer of limited immunity by the U.S. Attorney's office does have a Hollywood feel to it.

- "I've certainly been asked that over the years, would it make a great book or a great movie, and I fully agree. The only problem is we're still missing that last chapter. That's what we need."
- "I'm confident that one day, hopefully sooner rather than later, that the paintings will be returned and that's obviously the last chapter it would need to make a really complete story with a Hollywood ending."

Star struck

A Hollywood expert casts a crime

Even though Jason Ritter starred in Comedy Central's "Drunk History" version of the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum art heist, Angela Peri, owner of Boston Casting, said she knows who should be cast in any future major motion picture about the crime.

"We love Mark Wahlberg," she said. "I could see him as the lead thief. Christian Bale is also an amazing actor. He is such a chameleon"

Peri said there were several great local actors that appeared in "The Town" who would be great for any potential movie as well.

"These local guys that play really good hoods, they would be great in it," she said. "And the museum itself would make a gorgeous backdrop. I think it's an amazing story."

TEXTBOOKS ON A COLLEGE BUDGET

I just started my first year of college in Boston and have a long list of textbooks to buy for my classes. The school bookstore is expensive. Are there any budget-friendly options for my book list?

College textbooks are notorious for their high prices, but luckily you do have options. Consider searching online retailers such as Amazon or eBay for better prices on new and used books.

Used textbooks are often just as good as newer versions, but much more affordable. If you don't think you are going to hold on to your books after the semester ends, you can save money by renting books and returning them to the store after your finals.

If you have a device that displays eBooks, you can try to find digital copies of your textbooks to download.

Your school's library may even have some copies of your books available as well, so you may not need to purchase them at all.

My office recently conducted a survey on the price of textbooks. You can see the full results at Mass.gov/ocabr.

Each month, Undersecretary of Consumer Affairs and Business Regulation Barbara Anthony will answer consumer questions from Metro readers. Email consumer.communications@state.ma.us with "Ask the Undersecretary" in the subject line.

Congress question White House approach on Syria

Both parties. Surveys of Congress show there are still large blocks of undecided lawmakers.

The White House pressed its case yesterday for military action in Syria but faced an uphill fight in Congress, where several prominent lawmakers said they have not been persuaded to approve strikes against Syrian President Bashar al-Assad's forces.

With a crucial test vote planned in the U.S. Senate on Wednesday, White House Chief of Staff Denis McDonough made the rounds of five Sunday talk shows to argue that a limited strike in response to Syrian government's alleged use of chemical weapons would send a message of deterrence to regional foes.

But Mike Rogers, Republican chairman of the House Intelligence Committee and a supporter of the strikes, said President Barack Obama had made "a hash" of his argument for military action to punish Assad.

Obama's plan faces significant resistance from Republicans and his fellow Democrats in Congress, with many lawmakers worried military strikes in Syria could lead to a prolonged U.S. commitment there and spark broader conflicts in the region. REUTERS

THE WORD

Alexandra Cavallo takes on the world of gossip.

ALEXANDRA CAVALLO

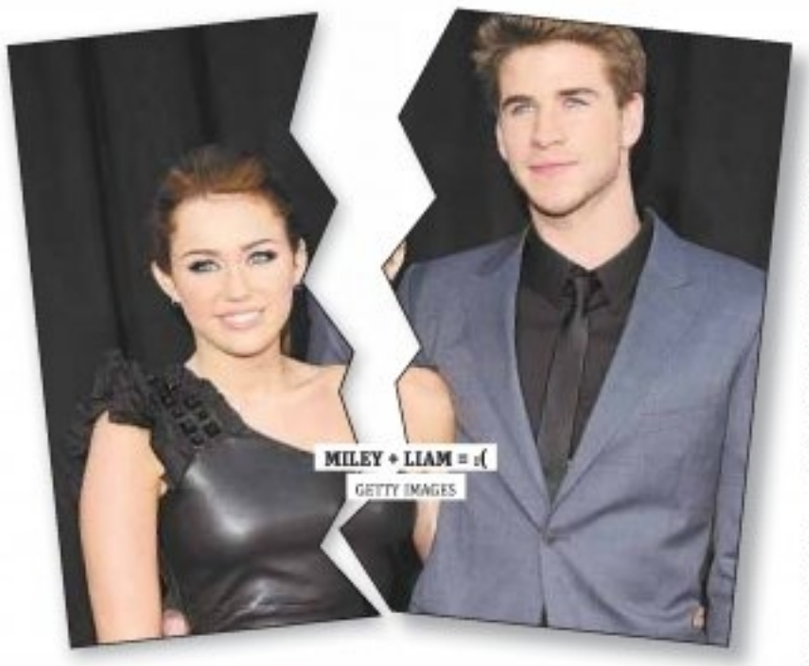
@AlexCavallo



MILEY + LIAM = :(
GETTY IMAGES

1 Cyrus back on the market?

If the Kardashians aren't giving me easy "news" fodder, it's Miley Cyrus. I love Miley.

Unfortunately, I guess Liam Hemsworth does not love Miley. According to Us Weekly, he's over their engagement and does not want to make it twerk. LOL, see what I did there? Twerking is so hot right now, you guys. And so is that new club drug Molly, which — heads up, parents — is not new, but will help you twerk better and also maybe kill you.

Anyway, my point here (I had one, I swear) is that Miley and Liam will not be getting married after all. Also, Miley called a paparazzo a C-word over the weekend, and then announced it over Twitter. Miley doesn't care.

2 Who gave this kid a Kar (dashian)?

I was going to write something about how sick I am of the Kardashians' absurdly public exploits, but then I remembered that if those bozos stopped fighting publicly, having huge butts, marrying athletes and rappers, etc., I'd have a much harder time finding things to write about for this column.

And since I'm writing this particular column on a Sunday, with last night's cocktails still sloshing around in my bloodstream, I was pleased that Kendall Jenner (one of the two teenage sisters, who I can't tell apart, but I can tell are right on track to grow up to be just as vapid and useless as their big sisters) did not disappoint this weekend.

Kendall was apparently taking video selfies of herself while driving on Friday. How do we know this? The little brainiac posted these videos of herself to the Internet. They show Kendall making duck faces that she definitely thinks are adorable and sexy eyes that definitely were not focused anywhere near the road — which is the place that eyes, sexy or otherwise, should be focused when one is operating a motor vehicle.

This is such a predictably dumb and self-obsessed Kardashian thing to do that it almost seems orchestrated by whatever media overlord pulls their puppet strings (looking at you, Seacrest!). This, mind you, is right on the heels of Kylie (the other teenager) crashing her $110,000 Mercedes last week.

Please take a nice long minute to consider the fact that a 16-year-old girl had a $110,000 car and you're probably reading this with your face in some guy's sweaty armpit on a subway on your way to a job that doesn't involve being famous for a living. Happy Monday.

[Editor's note: Apparently we do not keep up with the Kardashians quite as well as we think we do. In Friday's Word, we mistakenly wrote that Lamar Odom is married to Kourtney. He is married to Khloe. Though maybe not for long.]

EYES ON THE ROAD, KENDALL JENNER! / GETTY IMAGES

THERE IS NO MCDONALD'S IN GWYNETH PALTROW'S HOUSEHOLD. / GETTY IMAGES

3 Goop's kids ate fries

I think that Chris Martin probably took his kids to McDonald's just to stick it to Gwyneth Paltrow. Because can you imagine a more horrifying scenario for Goop than the idea of Gwynnie's kale-fed angels eating fast food? In a plastic booth? In the vicinity of poor people and their poor children?

According to the National Enquirer, Paltrow and family were in the Hamptons for a signing of her new book, "I Know Best and You're All Ugly," (just kidding, it's a cookbook titled "It's All Good" — that first title is the name of my future memoir) and, while Gwynnie was busy with her legions of adoring fans, Martin took the kids to lunch at Mickey D's. And apparently she freaked out. Elegantly, though. Like, a super-refined freak-out.

Job relocation tips from the experts

Exit strategy. Looking for a new job in a new city? Here's what you need to know.

Whether you're striving for a bigger paycheck or just need a change of pace, there are many reasons why people choose to relocate for their careers. But landing a job in a new city is tough, regardless if you have a Rolodex of contacts. We had hree career experts dish on how to stand out to employers (even with an out-of-state address on your résumé).

While employers may initially be hesitant to hire someone not-local, there are benefits to broadening the applicant pool. "The advantage is bringing someone with fresh ideas and new contacts," says Nicole Williams, career expert for LinkedIn. "It can completely change their business by gaining support from another region."

MARY WHEELER
letters@metro.us

Use your resources

Networking tips from the experts

1 Contact your alumni association to see who works at that company or even in the industry, says Mistal.

2 Utilize online resources like LinkedIn. This can help identify target companies, and narrow down your list of potential cities as quickly as possible, says Levit.

Ch-ch-ch-changes

What to say during the interview

Besides doing your interview homework, Mistal recommends highlighting something you're excited to experience or love about the new location. Also, don't focus on moving logistics until after you get an offer. "Steer the conversation toward the fact that you're up for a change and looking forward to a new challenge," says Williams.

How to stand out

"I'll be in the area"

For a job you really want, let the hiring manager know that you'll "be in the area," and would like to meet. Book a flight and meet them in person (yes, this means spending money). "Video conferencing and phone interviews can connect people, but nothing replaces a handshake and sit-down," says Williams.

Pack it up, you're moving for your job. / PHOTODOBJECTS.NET

Worth importing

Three common mistakes

1 Not highlighting why a company should make an exception: "Your job application needs to demonstrate that you are more than just the average employee, says Maggie Mistal, a career consultant, radio host and speaker.

2 Not explaining upfront why you are considering moving: "Employers are curious as to why someone would be motivated to make such a major life change," says Alexandra Levit, author of the business book "Blind Spots" and career blogger for The Fast Track.

3 Lying on your résumé about your current address: "The employer will eventually find out you lied, which will no doubt cost you the job," says Williams.

When can you start?

You're hired, now what?

If you're currently employed, Levit suggests starting no earlier than one month from the date of the offer (ideally two months). If you're asked to start sooner, "ask about corporate housing, working remotely or even commuting," says Mistal.

US shouldn't do the UN's job

I'm tired of watching the rest of the world sit back while the U.S. sacrifices its lives and economy to uphold the standards of humanity. The reason the rest of the world does nothing is because they know we will. The U.S. is not the world's peacekeeping organization — that's what the U.N. was supposed to be. If we continue to be the only country that steps up in times of atrocity, there is no reason for any other country to participate. It's time it put an end to this no-win cycle.
MICHAEL CHIMENTI, VIA EMAIL

Other cultures aren't awful

Re: 'Metro's gone subversive' (Metro, Sept. 6-8) How sad that people are still so racist. The greatest thing about our city, our country, is its diversity. It's a pretty sick leap for someone to suggest that Metro is a "communist rag" for sporting a Spanish cover. I pray for the ignorant people in our world that think the way this reader does — fortunately, most of us do not share this ugly, racist opinion!
CHRISTINA LAFORGIA, VIA EMAIL

The universal language

So I pick up a Metro the other day and notice that the front page is in Spanish. Perhaps they delivered the wrong edition? I look inside and see that everything else is in English, and there's a BIG BOLD HEADLINE on page 3 with a story explaining what's up with the Spanish-language front page. Oh, I get it: They're making a point about photography as a universal language, that's all! You see how easy that was, kids? There's a lesson to be learned here: Don't judge a book by its cover, and do a little research before jumping to conclusions. Otherwise, you might sound silly. That would be bad. RICHARD NEY, VIA EMAIL

Pats overcome mistakes in narrow Week 1 victory

NFL. We look at three things we learned in the Patriots' 23-21 victory over the Bills in Orchard Park .

Tom Brady threw two TDs but was intercepted as well. / GETTY IMAGES

Let's get one thing out of the way: The Patriots had no business winning on Sunday.

New England spent the first three-plus quarters doing just about everything in their power to ensure they would drop their Week 1 game to the Bills. But the Bills are the Bills for a reason, and in the end, they found a way to hand the Patriots the win.

Trailing 21-17 heading into the fourth quarter, the Patriots kicked two field goals, including one with nine seconds remaining to escape Buffalo with a 23-21 win.

Here are three important things to take from the win:

1 Turnovers kill
Stevan Ridley entered the season as the clear cut No. 1 back on the Patriots roster, and he was due a heavy workload in order to compensate for the inexperience of the Patriots' receiving corps. So how did Ridley respond? He coughed up the ball on the team's first possession, but was ruled down by contact. He wouldn't be saved the next time around though. In the second quarter, the Bills recovered a Ridley fumble and returned it 74 yards for their first touchdown of the game. That would end Ridley's day early, as Shane Vereen took over from there and finished with 101 yards on 14 carries and 58 yards on seven receptions. Tom Brady's pass to Zach Sudfeld was bobbled and picked off late in the second quarter, which led to a Bills TD, and later, Brady fumbled the snap on a fourth-and-goal line situation. Not pretty.

2 Amendola finds redemption
There's one gigantic knock on Danny Amendola, and that is he simply can't stay on the field. Well, the Amendola backers had to eat crow for at least a little bit on Sunday, as No. 80 left the game after he appeared to reaggravate his groin injury. But they — and he — would find redemption. Amendola reentered to the game in the second half, and was an integral part of the team's game-winning drive. He finished with a game-high 10 receptions for 104 yards.

3 Don't forget the 'D'
Seven of the Bills' 21 points came with the Pats defense on the sidelines. Seven other points came after a Brady interception put the Bills in great field position. Still, the two touchdowns given up by the Pats 'D' proved they're still a work in progress.

Kyle Arrington was one player who stood out for New England, however, as he caused two fumbles and displayed great tackling.
